In the winter of 1959 seven local men met in the 'back room' of the Angel Inn in Wooler and decided the town needed a camera club. An independent meeting room was required and Father Willis, one of the seven, offered the basement of the presbytery. Here the club remained until 1971 when it moved to the community centre hall. Later it moved to Glendale Hall in Cheviot Street and recently to The Cheviot Centre.

Membership peaked in the early nineties to about seventy and is now in the thirties. However, if the monthly competitions are anything to go by we still have a lot of very active photographers!

The club has now been meeting for over 65 years and although we have moved with the times, we are still a friendly group, sharing ideas, tips and giving advice.

The great thing about photography is that it is increasingly accessible to all. At our club our members have a wide range of cameras, so it is a great place to see them in action and if you are thinking of upgrading, finding the right one for you.

We can help you get your treasured photos off your camera and onto a screen or paper, so you can enjoy them and share with others.

Nobody is above learning something new. Workshops play a great part in learning new skills, as do our days out. If you are interested in taking up photography, or would simply like to attend one of our guest speaker evenings, please just come along, we would love to see you.

Annual Membership £22
Visitors £3 per meeting
